DOGS KILL SPECIAL BREED OF CHICKEN

Mr. and Mrs. M. E. Danly who live in the Woodland Subdivision. Front street and 114th Ave. west of Mokena, are breeders of a rare type of chicken, the Andalusians. They are very lovely fowl, being a delicate blue in color and said to have originated in Spain. It is said there are only four flocks of this bird in the United States and only two hatcheries.

The Danlys are very proud of these chickens which lay beautiful white eggs. It took a great deal of time and effort on their part to get these chickens and they were very disappointed when Wednesday morning Mrs. Danly saw two stray dogs come into her yard and kill two of these rare birds. They had been missing some of them previously, but never saw just what it was that was killing them. These dogs also killed some of their brown leghorns.

Owners of dogs should keep them at home, or run the risk of losing their dogs, which the Danlys will shoot on sight when they come on their property.

2 Mokena Railroad Crossings To Have Modern Protection

A number of years ago the Mokena Village Board went on record favoring the installation of electric crossing flashers and gates at the Wolf Road and Depot crossings of the Rock Island railroad in Mokena, but owing to the war time restrictions and shortage of material the proposed improvements could not be installed, but the past week word has been received that the Rock Island is now in a position to put the new improvement into service soon. Installation work is to be begun within the next week or ten days according to the reports made. It will take several weeks to complete the job which will be a much needed protection as both crossings are unprotected during the night hours. Flagmen are on duty during the day time. These crossings both have heavy traffic and the new protection will be a big safeguard.

NEWSMEN AND FDR

Most important college of amateur physicians anywhere in the world, approximately 200 strong, now meets Tuesdays and Fridays at the White House. . . . These are newsmen assigned to cover the President. They assemble, make careful scrutiny, write lengthy analyses of the President's complexion, nervousness, every facial expression; try to interpret these in relation to his health. . . . Actually the President looks thinner, not too well tanned, but calm and fit, though he shows obvious sign of wearying at the scores of questions thrown at him during press tussles. . . . FDR still knows how to turn charm on and off, calls newsmen by their first names, teases them about "dope stories." . . . Since his return from the Alaska trip, Roosevelt is seeing more people than in the last six months, is growing more aware of domestic issues.

DUMBARTON OAKS

Secretary Hull's message to the opening Dumbarton Oaks peace parley had whole paragraphs paralleling Woodrow Wilson's statement of January 16, 1920, on the eve of the first League of Nations council meeting. . . . "It is our task here," Hull said, "to help lay the foundations upon which, after victory, peace, freedom and a growing prosperity may be built for generations to come." . . . Twenty-four years ago, Wilson said: "It will bring the League of Nations into being as a living force devoted to the task of assisting the peoples of all countries in their desire for peace, prosperity and happiness."

INDIAN TYPHOON

When Amb. William Phillips' famous letter advising Roosevelt that India was a U. S. problem leaked into print, the British government sent instructions to all British consuls in this country to inspire letters to editors, plus editorials in the local press. One man in New York alone wrote 76 letters to different newspapers. . . . Later, British consuls sent copies of editorials, etc., to the British Embassy, with accompanying notes, showing what a good job they had done. . . . In the Embassy, Josselyn Hennessy, British public relations man for India, left off the accompanying notes, sent the editorials to Sir Olaf Caroe in New Delhi, so Sir Olaf could see what a good job Hennessy had been doing. Sir Olaf then sent them to London. . . . Sir Olaf also cabled London that he had been able to keep the Phillips letter out of India so far, but "under existing conditions" it was sure to be smuggled in, in which case it would be published by the Indian press and there was nothing he could do to stop it. . . . By "existing conditions," Caroe meant anti-British subversion on the part of Indian officials who smuggle news into India despite censorship. Once inside India, the British can't prevent publication in Indian newspapers.

WASHINGTON PERSONALITIES

Breath-taking Bob Gros, California lecturer, has the faculty of coming to the nation's capital every year and interviewing more big-wigs per hour than anyone else in the U.S.A. He has just finished one of his breathless trips and sizes up performers on the Washington merry-go-round as follows:

Wendell Willkie — "The thinking-east, guttiest guy on the merry-go-round; politically unastute."

British Ambassador Lord Halifax — "Worst dressed, but one of the most charming. His sleeves were patched with red thread, he had on almost threadbare gabardine pants."

Donald Nelson — "Determined that small industry shall have a chance to reconvert now, before the armistice."

Economic Stabilizer Fred Vinson — "The best balanced."

Secretary of the Navy Forrestal — "Quick, likable, expounds this philosophy: 'Administration consists 95 per cent of smoothing out human frictions. The secret of American success is driving, restless energy that makes you have ulcers.'"

Secretary of War Stimson — "The most arbitrary."

Small Business Administrator Maury Maverick — "The most two-faced and dynamic."

Jim Farley — "The most realistic political analyst, the most bluntly and disarmingly frank."

In general, Gros found Washington taking the war in its stride; officialdom much more settled down than last year; less excitement, less hysteria, more efficiency.

MERRY-GO-ROUND

Senator Hiram Johnson, who rarely appears on the senate floor any more, still occasionally attends night baseball games at Griffith stadium. . . . Other ball fans are Senators Chandler of Kentucky, Walsh of New Jersey, Stewart of Tennessee, and Mead of New York, all frequent box-holders at the ball park.

Chennault's headquarters had issued orders to abandon the U. S. army 14th air base, the Japs moved in but found little of value for further operations.

Nazi Prisoners in France

German prisoners of war, 10,000 strong, are herded into their new enclosure as they prepare for a visit as guests of the Allies. They were taken in Allied pincers drive in France. The total number of prisoners taken, it is believed, will exceed by far any previously captured by American and British units.

Ballots Overseas

Overseas ballots for servicemen get top priority in the Pacific area where Pvt. Ted Robbins, Bloomsburg, Pa., Seventh AAF voting representative, is visiting shops, hangars, offices and flight line of squadrons from Hawaii to Saipan.

Hidden Gold Conserves High Protein Feed

Proper Fertilizers Essential War Need

Good pasture will provide livestock growers with "hidden gold" in the form of beef-making feeds that will conserve vitally needed protein crops, if proper management methods are followed.

"Pasture must continue to occupy a more essential place in the nation's livestock producing program until the war's end for several reasons," a statement by the Middle West Soil Improvement committee points out. "Shortages of labor and machinery have shown no signs of marked improvement. The scarcity of high protein feeds continues. Because of these facts, farmers will have to rely on pasture crops as a major source of sustenance for their livestock."

"Grains will, of course, be fed but farmers will want to use every bushel of grain where it will help make the most meat."

"Practical experience of successful livestock growers has demonstrated that high-producing pasture combinations will yield a beef pound-

Pastures Aid Increase

age per acre that compares favorably with the return from crops with higher seeding, tillage and harvest costs. For instance, a mixture of alfalfa and brome grass made more than 3 pounds of beef an acre daily in a test in Michigan.

"Bringing pastures to a high production level and maintaining them at this rate requires good management methods. This means following a soil conservation program that builds up fertility and provides plant foods that will assure a good stand of legumes and grasses. In such a program the use of a fertilizer containing phosphorus and potash plays an important part."

"Where a permanent pasture crop is planned, farmers will find generally that a top dressing of fertilizer this fall will pay for itself many times in producing earlier and more succulent grass for spring grazing next year as well as a heavier growth later."

"Agronomists at state colleges and experiment stations are glad to cooperate with farmers in providing information covering the most effective use of fertilizers on pasture crops. One important fact should be borne in mind in considering the soil's nutritional needs. This fact is that while crops such as alfalfa and clover add to the soil's nitrogen supply, they eat up its phosphorus and potash reserves."

Wild Plants Studied For Vitamin Content

Experiments to determine the vitamin value of various wild plants have been conducted by the U. S. department of agriculture, looking to a time when other sources of important vitamins might be lacking.

Buffaloberry, a native fruit of the western states and one of the popular fruit-bearing shrubs recommended for erosion control, proved exceptionally rich in ascorbic acid (vitamin C). A generous serving of the berries was found to furnish about twice the standard daily allowance of vitamin C. Jam made from the berries contained about two-thirds as much of this vitamin as the fresh fruit.

New Hampshire-grown wild blueberries were found to contain a fair supply of vitamin C if eaten raw.

Experiments showed wild rice as a good source of several B vitamins—thiamine, riboflavin, nicotinic acid, and pantothenic acid. And ordinary field mushrooms, Agaricus campestris, were also found to be rich in these four B vitamins.

Whole Milk Selling

A quarter of a million farmers have switched from selling farm-separated cream to selling whole milk during the last five years. Farm sales of whole milk at wholesale increased from 40 billion pounds average for 1935-39 to 60 billion pounds last year, a jump of 50 per cent. This increase was much greater than the total gain in farm milk production. It is not expected that postwar conditions will change this picture to any degree.

Help Them Cleanse the Blood of Harmful Body Waste

Your kidneys are constantly filtering waste matter from the blood stream. But kidneys sometimes lag in their work—do not act as Nature intended—fail to remove impurities that, if retained, may poison the system and upset the whole body machinery.

Symptoms may be nagging backache, persistent headache, attacks of dizziness, getting up nights, swelling, puffiness under the eyes—a feeling of nervous anxiety and loss of pep and strength. Other signs of kidney or bladder disorder are sometimes burning, scanty or too frequent urination.

MR. WINKLE GOES TO WAR

By THEODORE

W.N.U. RELEASE

THE STORY THUS FAR: Forty-four-year-old Wilbert Winkle, who operates a repair shop in the alley back of his home, is notified by his draft board that he is in I-A. He breaks the bad news to his domineering wife, Amy, who now hates to part with him. On arriving at camp Mr. Winkle is given his physical and to his great surprise and dismay, is accepted for service. He is sent to Camp Squibb, a thousand miles from home, where he meets Mr. Tinker, a man of his own age. After much hard training, Mr. Winkle is called in before his superior officer and told he is over 38 and can go home if he chooses, but Winkle says he'll stay in the army. He graduates from Motor Mechanics school.

CHAPTER IX

Mr. Winkle peered at him through his glasses and blinked. He had seen the Army work other wonders, even on himself, but never a miracle like this. "That's all right," he murmured.

"I suppose," Freddie went on, "I'm responsible for you being called 'Pop,' too."

"I don't mind," Mr. Winkle assured him. "In fact, I rather like it."

"Me," said Mr. Tinker, "I don't believe it. It's somebody else pretending to be him."

"He's a reformed character," Jack agreed.

Freddie looked at the bar. "I'm not so reformed I won't buy everybody a drink."

Over their glasses, in the noisy bar, Freddie explained how he had come to see the light. He was articulate about it.

"I'm not so reformed I won't buy everybody a drink."

"The kid here did it," he said, indicating Jack. "When I figure the Army made him almost up to licking me, I thought it must have something. Even for me. I got a look at myself, I mean, what I had been. I didn't even like my mustache."

"What about the Alphabet?" Mr. Winkle inquired.

"He isn't so bad," Freddie answered, "when you get to know him."

"You see?" Jack asked. "He's got the right attitude. Of course, he may still need a little polishing here and there, but I'm doing that."

Jack gave a practical demonstration of this when Freddie's gaze wandered to girls in the bar. "Come on," he told Freddie, "you're a strictly USO type now."

The next day Mr. Winkle was given a week's furlough. The permanent post to which he and the other Motor Mechanics School Graduates were to be sent wouldn't be ready to receive them for this length of time. He could, if he wished, return home at his own expense.

He sent Amy a telegram and then boarded a train.

Amy was at the station to meet him. At first they just stared at each other without being able to do anything else. It was an awkward moment. Then Amy cried, "Oh, Wilbert, I didn't think I would ever see you again!"

They embraced. He felt clumsy when he kissed her. It was almost as strange coming back to her as it was leaving her.

"Why," said Amy, "I hardly know you." She seemed surprised. She touched the buttons of his uniform.

"How are you?" he asked.

"I'm fine." She examined him again in some admiration. "I never thought you'd look like that in a uniform. And your stomach—it's gone. You'll have to have your picture taken."

"Well," he asked again, "how are you, Amy?"

"I'm fine," she repeated.

Mr. Winkle drove, for the novelty of feeling a regular car under his hands. It seemed light and dangerous after the trucks and command cars with which he had dealt lately in his field training.

He sensed Amy looking at him. "You've put on weight," she spoke in an aggrieved tone.

"I wrote you about it," he reminded.

"At least ten pounds."

"Twelve and a half."

"You never did that before." She sounded still more hurt. "No matter how much I fed you."

"It isn't the cooking," he assured her. "It's the exercise and being outdoors that makes you eat more."

Though he knew she felt better after he said this, a restraint remained between them. They found they could not at once, and easily, take up where they left off. The months in between, during which each had had another life, interfered and came between them. They had to get to know each other all over again.

Mr. Winkle sensed her staring at him anew, in a different way. He glanced at her, and saw that her gaze was contemplative, searching, a little suspicious.

He feared that she was reverting to being a termagant, and that the effects of his suddenly being made into a soldier were wearing off. He supposed he couldn't be sure about that until after the war and he returned, if he did, to his regular life.

"Wilbert," she asked, "did you see any women?"

"I told you I'd send you a postcard when I found somebody else," he said. "You didn't get one, did you?"

"No," she admitted slowly. She sat staring at him and he turned to look her for an instant straight in the eye. "I'm glad I didn't," she told him in a low voice.

Mr. Winkle was happy when she dropped the subject.

It was his turn to feel hurt when they reached the house and sneaked inside so none of the neighbors would see him.

Penelope, instead of greeting him joyously, as would have been expected, scrunched down on the floor, growling and barking, and glaring at him with disapproval. Mrs. Winkle scolded her, but it made no impression. Even when Mr. Winkle spoke to her coaxingly and let her sniff his hand, she wouldn't accept him or have anything to do with him. So far as Penelope was concerned, he was a stranger in his own house.

It was barely daylight when he awakened. He expected to hear the bustle of many men moving and cursing and the bugle tooting its dreadful call. He listened, not quite sure of where he was. He heard Amy's light breathing. He looked at his watch. It was exactly 5:45. He tried to go back to sleep again. This was the morning of his kingship.

But the king couldn't sleep any more. Harsh habit interfered, refusing him his crown.

It being also his accustomed time to eat, he felt hungry. After a time he got up quietly, put on his bathrobe, over his pajamas, and went out. Downstairs, Penelope growled, snarled when he spoke to her, and snapped when he made to pat her. He wandered outdoors just as a strange newsboy delivered the paper. The boy looked at him, startled, then interested, then wise, and went away whistling.

Mr. Winkle didn't approve of such precocious behavior in one so young.

He investigated the kitchen, over Penelope's continued protests, and devoured odd assortments of food. He had an idea that tickled him.

Sometime later, with a daintily prepared tray and the newspaper resting at one side of it, he went in to awaken Amy. Her eyes went wide and staring as he saluted and announced "Breakfast in bed for you, queen."

Mr. Winkle visited his shop to see that his tools and machines were in good order. He made small repairs about the house. He had his photograph taken so that Amy could have him up over the mantel while he was away, or if he didn't ever return.

He talked with Mr. Wescott, who first laughed outright at the sight of Mr. Winkle in his uniform and then was prone to be triumphant about his prediction for him. "What did I tell you?" he crowed. "You're being used as a mechanic, just like I said. You'll stay right here."

Formerly he and Mr. Wescott had considered together the large and broad scale aspects of war, and now his neighbor expected that, as an actual military man, he would have some expert ideas.

"Our antitank guns," Mr. Wescott inquired, "are they going to be able to stop the Germans?"

"I don't know a thing about them," said Mr. Winkle.

"But surely in your training—"

Mr. Winkle coughed apologetically. "I never saw one."

Mr. Wescott considered. A little of his pomposity left him and he proposed, "Perhaps I shouldn't be asking such questions. You probably have your orders not to let out any military secrets."

"No," said Mr. Winkle, "that isn't it. I don't know any military secrets."

"Thanks?" asked Mr. Wescott. "I've never seen a tank."

Mr. Wescott stared at him. He dropped the subject, and took up the Mediterranean campaign.

"How is it coming along?" Mr. Winkle asked.

"Do you mean to say you don't know?" he demanded Mr. Wescott.

"Well," said Mr. Winkle, "I hardly ever saw a paper in camp. Since I've been home I've glanced at the headlines a little, but I haven't read the details much."

"You," spluttered Mr. Wescott,

"above all people, you, in the service—"

"There isn't much time to talk about it," Mr. Winkle apologized.

"But you don't even sound interested," Mr. Wescott complained.

"Somehow," said Mr. Winkle, "I've come to leave that up to the generals."

"Of course," said Mr. Wescott stiffly. "Yes. Of course." He gathered the forces of his indignation and scolded pettishly. "All I can say is that you aren't any more of a soldier than I thought you'd be."

Too late, Mr. Winkle realized that he had offended his neighbor, that Mr. Wescott thought he meant to squelch and ridicule him as an arm-chair strategist. That had not been his intention at all. It was simply that he and Mr. Wescott had grown apart, that they had become strangers.

Domestically, the Winkles were as happy as they ever had been. They lived the few days he was home like a honeymoon taken up from where it was dropped many years before.

Amy seemed intent on making up to Mr. Winkle the period she had been shrewish, and he decided to enjoy this, no matter what might happen after the war.

She sewed on several buttons for him, and though her way wasn't exactly the manner in which he had learned to sew, he was delighted to have her do it. After that first morning, Mr. Winkle managed to stay in bed long enough for Amy, by getting up very early, to bring him his breakfast there.

The weather was fine and Mrs. Winkle squandered her gasoline ration by going on a picnic with him every day into the woods. On these trips even Penelope agreed to wag her tail sluggishly at the soldier, though she still wouldn't accept him wholeheartedly.

They spoke little of the war and his portion of it. Not that they took it for granted, or had become fatalistic about it, but they wished to forget it during the time they had together. Only on the day of his departure did the war come again between them.

Once more he held her in his arms. She wept, and he felt like crying, too. Then, when they parted, for a fleeting instant before they spoke or moved again, he saw that she looked at him defiantly, nearly with antagonism. But it wasn't a hen-pecking look. It was like the unreasonable anger of a person who loves another a great deal when the other has put himself in mortal danger.

Sergeant Technician Wilbert George Winkle would have preferred to be alone in one of the upper berths rather than occupying a lower berth with Corporal Technician Tinker. But that was the way the Army said it was to be on the troop train roaring through the cold night, and that was the way it was.

Mr. Tinker, besides taking up most of the space with his bulk, leaving only a few inches for Mr. Winkle, was in addition restless because, having boarded the train at night, none of them even knew in which direction it was going.

All they were sure of was that they were being shipped to an embarkation port.

Mr. Tinker twisted, nearly knocking Mr. Winkle out of the berth, and stared out the window. "Not a star," he said. "Mebbe I couldn't read them anyway, but you say you can."

"I think we're going south," the man above them called down.

"What do you think we're going to, the Civil War?" someone demanded. "I hear they ain't finished fighting it down there yet."

"Now," another differed. "It's east. That means England and the Nasties." This was for Mr. Tinker's sake, to devil him about being sent to fight the Germans instead of the Japs.

"What's it matter which way?" someone else wanted to know. "You ain't going to get off and catch another train, are you?"

But the king couldn't sleep any more.

He talked with Mr. Wescott, who first laughed outright at the sight of Mr. Winkle in his uniform and then was prone to be triumphant about his prediction for him. "What did I tell you?" he crowed. "You're being used as a mechanic, just like I said. You'll stay right here."

THE KINGDOM STRONGLY ESTABLISHED

LESSON TEXT—II Samuel 2:4-7; 5:1-10.
GOLDEN TEXT—They that trust in the Lord shall be as mount Zion, which cannot be moved, but abideth forever.—Psalm 125:1.

Position and power are important to a king, but of even greater importance is the winning of the hearts of his people. Only as he has them with him can he build a great nation.

David was the Lord's anointed. The kingdom was his. But God expected him to make the necessary effort and use his own abilities to bring it into a place of honor and usefulness. God gives us all we have, but He does not shower it down on us; we must go out and possess it.

Note in the three verses that preceded our lesson (vv. 1-3) that David moved forward only after prayer and divine guidance. Little wonder that he succeeded.

I. The Southern Tribes Declare Their Loyalty (2:4).

The nation was divided into two parts, Judah in the south and Israel in the north. To bring them together again called for consummate skill. David had it.

When Saul had died, David showed his respect and genuine loyalty to the king by his actions and by his song of lament which we find in II Samuel 1. Then by the Lord's leading he went to Hebron, the national capital of Judah, and there awaited the will of the people.

His declaration for David was not long in coming. They knew and respected him. He had shown himself to be their friend (I Sam. 30:26) and now they made him king. It was the first step and a long one in the right direction.

II. The King Makes Friends by Being Friendly (2:5-7).

The men of Jabesh-gilead, hearing that the Philistines had killed Saul, went for his body and gave it suitable burial. This gave David occasion to show his fine spirit of appreciation, which naturally warmed the hearts of all those who had loved and followed Saul. It was excellent strategy, but at the same time it was the natural expression of a kind heart.

He that would have friends must show himself friendly (Prov. 18:24). And why not? The friendly and open-hearted kindness of some Christians does more to win others to Christ than the brilliant discourses of some cold, exclusive Christian worker. Most of the Lord's work is done by ordinary people with warm hearts. Is there any reason why we cannot all be winsome and attractive in Christ?

III. The Northern Tribes Recognize Their King (5:1-5).

A period of seven years elapsed before this took place. The house of Saul was not willing to yield its supposed rights to the throne, and there was fighting and struggle. In it all David showed himself to be upright and considerate.

There is value in gradual development and in the struggle for the right. Had David found immediate success one wonders whether he would have gained the strength he needed for the future.

Then came the day when Israel, the tribes of the north country, of their own accord chose to put themselves under David. Note that it was because of their regard for him (vv. 1, 2) that they came to him (v. 3). That was great gain.

A united people! How important that is in the affairs of the nations. Nothing is more disturbing or a greater hindrance than internal friction. We ought to deal quickly and decisively with any group or force in the life of our nation which is clearly divisive or disloyal.

Think, then, how important it is that God's people in the Christian Church stand together in undivided loyalty to Christ, our King, and in loving devotion to one another.

IV. The King Established a National Capital (5:6-10).

Jerusalem, which was to be the "city of David," and which figures so prominently not only in history but in prophecy, had to be wrested from the hands of the heathen Jebusites, and be established as the sacred city and the capital of the Jewish nation.

Note that the kind and considerate king was not a weakling. He knew how to fight and to win. Verse 8 is difficult to interpret, but evidently does not mean that David was cruel. The Jebusites taunted him by saying that their blind and cripples could hold the wall against David's men. Then they doubtless put their best soldiers on the wall, and David said to his men, "Let us take these cripples."

We see in verses 9 and 10 that David was not only a fighter, but also a builder. He began then the development of Jerusalem, the great city of which we are yet to hear wondrous things.

WFA Created a Gigantic Icebox of Leased Mine

The War Food administration is now storing 75,000 tons of food in a leased limestone mine near Atchison, Kan. Its 12,000,000 cubic feet of caverns are equivalent to nearly one tenth of all public refrigerated storage space in this country today. While the construction of a warehouse with this capacity would cost about $15,000,000, the chief expense of equipping this mine was $1,000,000 for machinery to reduce its temperature of 50 degrees F. to 30 degrees.

SNAPPY FACTS ABOUT RUBBER

Sorting the contributions to the nation's scrap rubber drive has been a tremendous job. There are more than 75 types of rubber scrap, but most reclaimed rubber tonnage is derived from tires.

Rubber plantations covered over eight million acres at the outbreak of the war and had a potential production capacity of 1,600,000 long tons a year, according to rubber experts. Our synthetic rubber plants, some of which have already exceeded rated capacities, are expected to turn out over 1,000,000 long tons a year when operating at peak.

Elephants Are Not Afraid Of Mice; Can't See Them

How would you like to be an elephant and carry those big heavy teeth called tusks around all day?

You have heard a lot of things about an elephant that could scarcely be true. For instance, ever hear that elephants are afraid of mice? According to keepers of the zoo at Philadelphia, elephants pay no attention to mice. They probably don't even see them as their eyes are none too good.

But, you say, elephants pick up peanuts with their trunks. They do, but that's no sign they see them. You see, an elephant's trunk tells him what is going on better than eyes or ears.

It used to be horses and men. Now it's jeeps and Wacs in this newest of combined operations. Driving a jeep is just one of 239 duties to be performed in the Women's Army Corps.

With her hand upon the steering wheel of a jeep, the Wac is doing a job at work that contributes its small but important part in bringing closer the day of victory.

"People are inclined to feel that driving a jeep is of little importance to the war effort," WAC Recruiter Lt. Ellen Burns, of 120 N. Cott St., Joliet, Illinois, recently observed, but the Wac who drives one serves the cause of freedom in two ways. Not only is she driving that jeep because it's a necessary task, but if she were not behind that wheel, some soldier's hands would be kept

IN MEMORIAM

BARENZ—Mary. In loving memory of our dear mother who passed away September 18, 1940.

Just four years ago today,
God called you and you went away;
You bade no one a last farewell,
You said good bye to none.
Your loving heart had ceased to beat,

Before we knew it, you were gone.
You did not fail to do your best,
Your heart was true and tender;
You worked hard for those you left.
And ever will be remembered.

Letters from our Boys

Dear Ladies: A few lines to thank you for the beautiful birthday card and gift which I received from you. It was waiting for me when I arrived at my destination somewhere here in England. Your club should be praised by all the people of Mokena, as you surely try hard to keep a soldier's morale high, by not forgetting him. As my stay at home was only a matter of hours, I want to thank the people of Mokena at this time for their kindness to my mother and family during the loss of our Dad.

I suppose your Club is busy getting ready for Christmas. I hope some of us can spend Christmas at home with our families, but if we don't, we will surely be thinking of them and our friends too. As this is war, we have to take the bad brakes with the good ones. So will close, thanking everyone for the friendliness.

Always your friend,
Pvt. Phillip C. Hacker.

Dear Ladies: I have just a few minutes, so I'll thank you for your swell Easter card. Just received it several weeks ago. We just arrived at our base a short while ago and we had a lot a back mail. When a fellow comes in after a day's work, all tired and worn out, it sure makes him feel good to get some letters and know that the folks at home are thinking of him. We are pretty busy and tired out, so writing doesn't always go so good, but we all try our best. The heat is harder on us than the work. We have to stick with it and get this war over, so we can live a normal life again.

Once again thanks for the Easter card and in appreciation, I'll do my best at my job.

Wm. G. Abbe, M, 3-c, Pt. Base 21, South Pacific.

The Women's Guild of the Grace Episcopal church met yesterday in the home of Mrs. Ceward Batson Sr. Tentative plans were made for the Wacs are playing increasingly important parts in sustaining the Army's high standard of health. They perform many vital tasks for the Medical Department, acting as laboratory, X-ray, surgical, and dental technicians. Whole detachments are already on duty at Army hospitals, doing dozens of the jobs that are necessary to restore American soldiers to health — jobs Army training prepared them for.

Radio repair work requires a high degree of skill, but Wacs who have taken the Army's efficient training course do the job and do it well. The men with whom they work are the first to assert that Wacs know their jobs. Photography and related fields also offer many opportunities for Wacs. Training films are used extensively in our Army, and Wacs do various jobs in preparing and projecting these films.

One of the jobs which the Army entrusts to its efficient Wacs is the weighing of bomb fragments. The results of this skilled and careful work will one day be felt by the enemy. Army research, in which the women of America can have a part, gives our fighting men the best that modern science can devise. Army training can be the foundation of a postwar career as well as helping to win the war for us now.

Women with artistic ability can find ready use for their talents in the WAC. The preparation of training slides which are projected on a screen to explain tactics and weapons to trainees requires artists who are clever with pen and pencil. Training has been made easier by such methods and the Wacs who do such work can well be assured that their efforts are an effective contribution to the victory which lies ahead.

Army of the United States

ESSENTIAL

to the life and growth of America

Its vital root-system reaching deep into the earth, a great tree receives the nourishment essential to maintain life and sturdy growth.

So too does the American way of life depend upon the huge network of railroads which developed the resources of the nation, moving on through great agricultural and industrial areas, carrying the essentials of America's life and growth.

Of this network, 8,000 miles are the ROCK ISLAND LINES. Here are 8,000 miles of well-kept steel highways which draw from the resources of 14 middle-western states. ROCK ISLAND helped to bring growth and success to that vital area, at the same time serving the entire nation through interchange of traffic to all points.

Essential in the early building of our nation—vital today in moving steady streams of war supplies—ROCK ISLAND LINES will have a big job to do in the future, too.

When America's chief concern is the building of the peace, ROCK ISLAND'S responsibility will be the moving of the essentials to another period of American prosperity.

As yesterday—and today—so tomorrow ROCK ISLAND'S sole purpose is to provide the finest in transportation.

Dear Members:

I am sorry that I did not write a letter of thanks to the Service Club sooner. But our training program has not let up yet. We are kept very busy, so that gives me very little time to write letters.

I wish to thank each and everyone of the New Lenox Service club who made it possible for me to receive such a nice card and box of candy on my birthday. It made me very happy and pleased. I enjoyed it very much and so did my buddies. It raises a fellow's morale one hundred percent when he knows that he is not forgotten when he leaves his home town to fight for his country. I didn't realize how much a service man enjoys a box from his Service club until I joined the Navy.

I like Navy life a lot and am in the best of health and happiness. The training program is set up to make a man out of you if you are not a man already. Navy chow is fine, but it doesn't compare with home cooking. It took quite awhile to get used to it, but after eight weeks of training

I am now able to eat anything. The food the Navy gives to us is the best but I guess it is just the change from Civilian life to Navy routine.

Again I wish to thank all for the nice card and candy. I hope to see you all soon. Say hello to all the members of the Service club for me.

WARTIME IDEAS FOR POULTRYMEN

POULTRY HOUSE LIGHTING KEEPS 'EM LAYING LONGER

Steps up production and profits

One of the secrets of successful poultry raising is in knowing how to keep your chickens working more and yourself working less.

Poultry house lighting is an easy way for you to make your layers put in more overtime on those wartime jobs of theirs — producing more food for Victory . . . and boosting egg profits. Just one or two small bulbs and a home-made automatic time switch (like either of those pictured below) are all that's needed to get them up earlier and to keep them working longer on the egg production line.

Power isn't just limited to the lighting job in the hen house. In almost every phase of poultry raising it has a time- and work-saving chore to do. It operates electric brooders that cut chick losses . . . pumps and warms the water that builds more and bigger eggs . . . grinds and mixes feed efficiently and quickly—and does all this with a minimum of work on your part.

Build an easy-to-make automatic time switch — a silent bugler that gets them up early!

Harold Cheney, recently received a letter from his brother T. S. Walter Cheney somewhere in France. After inquiring about his mother and other relatives he related the following: How's the weather back there, it is still so hot? The weather here hasn't been so bad although we did have a lot of rain. It doesn't get as hot here as in the States.

The French people treat us very nice and are glad to see us. When we stop along the road they come out and give us a drink of cider or wine. We got a dozen eggs the other day and they sure went good. We gave some of our rations in exchange,

I sent a few things I took from a German to you. Let me know when and if you get them. The Franc note I got from a German too. Keep it for me and don't lose it. We went up to the front awhile ago and boy, she's plenty hot up there. A few times we were out ahead of our own tanks and infantry. The Germans are pretty tough to get out of those hedge rows here. Some of their dug outs are built darn near like a home. They have chairs and tables in them and you also see many wine bottles. A lot of dead cattle are lying around and are starting to smell bad. Lots of Germans I saw look like a bunch of young kids.

I went over to some garden before supper and dug me a few spuds. They were small but I got a good meal out of them.

Tell mother I said hello, I had a nice long letter from her the other day and will try to answer tomorrow.

Back to Elm Street, U. S. A.

Back from the business of killing — to the business of living!

Back from scenes of hatred, despair and destruction to a homeland of peace, hope and opportunity!

Millions of young Americans are coming back to thousands of farms — to thousands of peaceful Elm Streets in every city, town and village of America!

They've made up their minds to a lot of things while they've been away.

They've seen the suffering of homeless terrorized families — people who have lost their self-respect, their hope, their health — everything.

They've seen a large part of the world in ruins, because a few fanatical men sold "gold bricks" to millions of people who traded in their freedom for promises of security — for brightly painted pictures of a "planned economy" under an all-wise, all-powerful government.

And they want no part of that sort of thing here in America.

They want jobs. They want to plan their own lives. Make their own futures. Go places under their own power.

And we must give them that opportunity.

But to do it, wartime restrictions and controls must be removed from agriculture, business — and the individual citizen — as quickly as possible.

Farmers must be free to plant what they want, and as much as they want — without needless bureaucratic supervision.

Taxes must be adjusted so that money will be available to finance the change-over to peacetime production.

Greater incentives must be provided, so that workers can make more money, by making more goods for more people.

Mr. Private Citizen must be allowed to make money — and be free to invest it in business ventures of his own — or of others.

Prosperity has always come to America through the growth of production — not its restriction — on farms and in factories.

Profitable production will make jobs for the boys who are coming back. But business, labor, agriculture and an understanding government must work together to create it — hold it — and increase it.

Buy War Bonds and Stamps — and Keep Them!

Baseballs and Electric Bulbs Are Prized

Baseballs and electric light bulbs are among the most highly prized possessions of 2,000 American fliers confined in Stalag Luft III, a German prison camp, according to word received from Col. D. T. Spivey, Senior American officer at the camp. In a letter of thanks to the Geneva Office of War Prisoners Aid, Colonel Spivey mentioned this incongruous combination in a heartening report of improved conditions at that camp.

Baseball and softball, said the Colonel, are by far the most popular games here and we ever need more balls, bats and gloves. The light bulbs he said, are still the primary need of the camp, in view of the tremendous amount of reading that the prisoners do. The lending library of the camp is crowded all day long with eager men. The school and reference books recently sent them by War Prisoners Aid has filled a long felt and most important need.

American prisoners of war behind the barbed wire of war prisoners' camps in Germany, in the Philippines and in Japan, are now receiving millions of dollars worth of sporting goods, musical instruments, books, special wood working tools, art supplies and study courses that help them keep the long and bleak hours filled with interest and keep them mentally and physically fit. This was revealed today by Henry E. Heide-man, Chairman of Region V of the National War Fund Campaign in Cook, Lake and DuPage counties.

In the past year, more than $4,000,000 was spent by War Prisoners Aid to send such goods to prisoners of war. For the year ending September 30, 1945 over five and three-quarter million dollars has been allocated to War Prisoners Aid by the National War Fund, said Mr. Heide-man. War Prisoners Aid operates from Geneva, Switzerland and coordinates the efforts of similar organizations from other countries. In addition to the books and supplies it secures and furnishes through its own funds, War Prisoner Aid also supplies for the Armed forces Institute courses provided by the War Department.

Neutral workers of War Prisoners aid visit both Allied and enemy prison camps to learn the needs of the men and then try to fill these needs.

There is a clear distinction between the work of the War Prisoners Aid and the Prisoners of War Services of the American Red Cross. These two organizations through their international bodies are recognized and accepted by all nations, belligerent and neutral. War Prisoners Aid is charged with the responsibility for providing recreational, educational and spiritual assistance to war prisoners of all nationalities, including the enemy. The Red Cross is the agency responsible for distributing food, clothing, medicines, comfort articles and for the transmission of messages.

In addition to War Prisoners Aid, the National War Fund includes: United Seamen's Service, USO and USO Camp Shows Abroad and 18 recognized War Relief and Refugee Relief Organizations.

Facts About Soldiers Ballots

The contention by a partisan minority group, that the Illinois Soldier Voting Law which provides a full ballot to members of the armed forces, is unwieldy, too complicated, and designed to cheat the soldier of his vote will prove to be a boomerang. Secretary of State, Richard Yates Rowe, predicted in Springfield.

Proof that the Illinois Soldier Voting Law which was enacted at a special session, is working successfully is reflected in the huge volume of applications for ballots that have been received, Secretary Rowe said.

To date more than 200,000 applications for the full Illinois ballot have been received by the Secretary's office, and they are pouring in at the rate of around 8,000 daily. To handle this huge influx of mail, the Secretary has been compelled to add to his staff and has established a night shift.

To speed up the actual issuing of ballots by county clerks to the members of the armed forces in the United States and on foreign soil, the Secretary's office has forwarded to county clerks, more than 10 days earlier, an unofficial certificate. This will allow county clerks and election commissions additional time to print their ballots and give military personnel more time to vote and get their ballots back to be counted in the general election.

Irregardless of obstruction and carping criticism on the part of those who would deny the soldier his vote, the Illinois Soldier Voting Law will enable them to vote the same ballot as their folks back home, Secretary Rowe said.

AFTER the war there is certain to be a shift in more than a few cities so far as baseball and football are concerned along major lines.

There will be a new tidal wave of sport, a greater boom than sport knew after the first World War in 1919 and 1920.

It is almost certain that Los Angeles, on its way to 5,000,000 or 6,000,000 population, will be one of the new main centers in both baseball and football.

With transportation so far advanced and new improvements coming Los Angeles will be only a few hours away from New York, much less Detroit and Chicago.

Grantland Rice

Los Angeles for some time has been one of the big sporting centers of the country.

Los Angeles has known football crowds, plus track and field crowds, above 100,000 at the Olympic. How many other cities can match this?

As a major league baseball city I doubt that any two other big league towns could outdraw this fast growing metropolis on the West coast.

Los Angeles isn't the only present minor league city now out to break into the big league show. Baltimore is another. So is Buffalo. Both fine prospects.

Baltimore has already proved to be one of the best football spots in the country where crowds from 40,000 to 50,000 are willing to pay out money to see pro exhibition games, and where Navy and Notre Dame can pass 60,000.

St. Louis is almost sure to lose one of its major league teams. Even pennant winners can't stir up the inhabitants, although both her teams have been setting the pace most of the present season.

San Francisco is another big-time spot in sport, one of the best. New Orleans can draw football crowds above 70,000.

Rush to Pro Football

The rush to professional football after the war ends will be on the terrific side. In addition to the present pro football league, I know of at least three other leagues that are under way, or will be started soon.

These will range coast-to-coast and from Texas to the Canadian border.

There is hardly room enough for more than two major football leagues, so the unsuccessful team will take a neat beating on the financial side.

Selections of cities that have spectator accommodations will play a big part in naming the survivors.

Just where they will find enough talent to handle the proposed new leagues is another guess. But there are more than a few willing to risk their cash along these lines.

In addition to the cities that make up the present major football league, those under consideration include Los Angeles, Baltimore, Buffalo, Dallas, San Francisco, Atlanta and New Orleans, with a second team in New York.

One point to think about is that not all members of the present big league make any financial killing. New York and Washington head the pack. The Chicago Bears have done well. Brooklyn had lost good money. Cleveland was no mint—and the same goes for Detroit.

Green Bay Successful

Green Bay, with a series of great teams, has made a fine showing for its size. But I wouldn't know how much money Green Bay has made.

It will be interesting to watch this rush to pro football when the fighting ends. It will at least be a big break for the players who can sit back and take the top offer. But they will first have to be sure they will collect.

There should be room enough for two major leagues in football, just as there is in baseball, with the same world series arrangement for the wind-up. But the battle to establish the second league may easily be a wild and woolly affair, where the fur will be knee deep before the finish.

I don't believe anyone can doubt there will be a large and active post-war boom in every form of sport. There are too many reasons for this to happen, with some 10,000,000 veterans looking for excitement.

Whether or not this boom can match the quality of the first post-World-war boom that gave us Ruth, Dempsey, Bobby Jones, Tilden, Man o' War and others in those high altitudes is something only the next few years can show.

Sammy Baugh and the 'T'

The majority of pro football coaches will tell you that Washington's Redskins are the team to beat this season—the toughest assignment that each must face. For in addition to more experienced material the Redskins still have Sammy Baugh, who is supposed to operate from the T-formation for a change.

Sammy is hard to handle from any formation, including the entire alphabet.

AS Clara Rivers parked her car before the Northville Farmers' Bank, William Hudson thrust his long face inside the window. "Car's gettin' kinda run-down, ain't it, Clara?"

Clara laughed, a plump, middle-aged spinster's pleasant laugh. "I'm not squanderin' money on new ones. I learned a lesson, William, when my father died and I got that mean note from one of the bank directors, threatenin' to foreclose on my farm. Lucky I found Pa's money in time. Only that letter rankles. I keep wonderin' who done it."

"When I find out, they'll answer to me!" William's voice dropped. "Ye know how I feel about ye, Clara. Any time ye say the word—"

"Sh! Someone's comin'!" William nodded contemptuously. "Dumbest businessman in the state."

Big, good-natured Bruce Bigelow ambled over, grinning. "Mornin', Clara. Mornin', William. Well, William, you sure outsmarted me last week. Heard you sold my hog for twice what you paid me."

"Well, ye begged me to buy."

"Dumb," Bruce chuckled. "That's me!" he turned to Clara. "Clara, I picked up a nice box of chocolates. Could I bring it over tonight?"

Clara flushed. "Well, Will and me—"

"Sure!" William broke in. "I'd enjoy eatin' chocolates while I beat ye at smear, Bruce. Or this here old ladies' game, annygrams. Hear ye've taken it up lately."

He went off and Bruce looked at Clara ruefully. "Clara, you ain't gonna marry William?"

Clara snapped, "If so, I wouldn't starve. I admire a smart man, Bruce."

"I know, Clara, but maybe I got reasons for appearin' so dumb!" "Then you better prove it, Bruce. You got just tonight."

All the way home Clara fumed. She was so angry at Bruce that she'd almost have taken William Hudson, if it weren't for her awful uneasiness about the note. She took it from his hiding place back of the old Seth Thomas clock and read it for the thousandth time. It was typed in capitals on the bank's stationery, and signed only DIRECTORS. Every director had declared indignantly, "Clara, if we find out who did this, we'll oust him!" Well, after a year, maybe she ought to forget. But...

At ten that evening Clara could have cried. Bruce had lost every game. "You boys play this final one without me," she said, looking straight into Bruce's eyes. "Last game takes all."

The first plays went badly for Bruce. He held one word; BEAR. He drew A and made MA. "Take your MA to make MASS," William said.

Bruce drew and passed. "This is embarrassin'!" William's eyes narrowed. "Take your BEAR to put with MASS and make EMBARASS!"

Clara gasped. "But—" "Hush!" Bruce said. "No kitbitzin!" He acquired two words, RITE and STRING.

"Take that RITE to make ENTIRE," William said.

Bruce drew and passed. "Nice game, eh, Clara? Interestin'!"

William leered. "Take your STRING to put with ENTIRE and make INTERESTING."

Clara was furious. "Bruce, that ain't —"

"No help!" Bruce said. Then, "Take your EAR to make FEAR." Losing a word upset William.

"Come on," Bruce teased. "Don't take from now to February."

"Thanks," William sneered. "I'll take your FEAR to put with BUY and make FEBUARY."

Clara burst out, "That ain't the way to spell —"

"Never mind," Bruce said sternly. William had nineteen words. "Twenty words out," Bruce sighed. "Last game takes all. I'd sure like to win. It's — urgent!"

"Urgent, eh? I'll jest take your CUR to put with my HINT and make URCHINT! Hate to win so easy, Bruce."

Bruce leaned across the table, admiringly. "You got a lot of big words, Will. Pushin' 'em around, addin' a little here and there, you could make a little sentence."

Suddenly, before Clara's eyes lay a familiar message: VERY URCHINT YOU PAY UP WITH INTEREST BY FEBUARY OR SOMETHING EMBARASSING WILL HAPPEN.

"Remind you of anything, Clara?" Bruce asked.

Clara went to the clock and returned to spread a worn paper on the table. "What's that, Clara?" William asked hoarsely.

"Just the note you sent me, Will, when Pa died."

William's face purpled. "Look here! This ain't proof—"

"Tis," Bruce said quietly. "I tried out every other bank director, before witnesses. None of 'em's got just this way of spelling these words. Maybe you'd like to resign, Will, without lettin' the town know why." He turned to Clara. "Sorry about losin', Clara."

Clara smiled meltingly. "You won the last game, Bruce. Last game takes all—including me!"

Cabled From Somewhere In Dutch New Guinea By George Lait

(International News War Correspondent.)

Col. David W. Hutchison, commander of one of the wings of Lieut. Gen. George Kenny's bomber force in the New Guinea interior, now en route to his home in Madison, Wis., on leave, told me of a new technique evolved on the spur of the moment by one of his night fighter pilots. The technique, however, is not recommended too highly for repeat performances. This night fighter took off to attack Jap bombers which were raiding Wake Island. Anti-aircraft gunners and searchlight crews could hear his engine purring in the sky. Suddenly, over the radio they heard the pilot shout: "I am coming into searchlights! For Pete's sake shoot this so-and-so off my tail." The fighter pilot roared into the searchlights' beams with the Jap bomber close behind. The anti-aircraft crews shot off the Jap's tail.

There's a big treasure hunt going on at Lae, British New Guinea. Not for Genghis Khan, but for 200 cases of prewar Scotch whiskey buried there by Manager Burns, of Philip Company, before the Jap invasion. Burns, who is now in England with the RAF, intends returning after the war to dig up his cache. The Yanks, with everything from entrenching tools to bulldozers, meanwhile are ripping up the jungle, hoping to beat him to the swag.

Some New Guinea points have a real Broadway flavor these days. In one day I bumped into Maj. Abe Schechter, former bigshot at NBC; Sgt. George McLemore, noted sports columnist, now a combat correspondent; Lieut. Jack Mile, the sports writer, still of approximately the same tonnage as the heavy cruiser on which he is serving; Lieut. Larry Jones, whose father operates Gertner's restaurant, New York, and who is in charge of the largest GI messes in the southwest Pacific; Lew Parker and Jackie Heller, night club performers entertaining troops; Jack Davis, New York representative of the Australian Consolidated Press, who came over for a six-month gander at the war; Capt. Jack Cross, Westchester county journalist (husband of Powers model Betty Riddell) and Capt. Dick Krolick, also a journalist and habitué of East 45th street's famous Pen and Pencil bar; Eddie Dowling's son, Jack, war correspondent for a Chicago newspaper; Douglas (Wrongway) Corrigan, ferrying planes for the Fifth air force, and Col. Merian Cooper (he's gone home on leave to visit his wife, the former Dorothy Jordan of the movies) who produced "Chang," "Grass," and "Long Voyage Home"; Alfred Vanderbilt, who with his brother, George, is giving the Japs hell as commanders of PT boats.

Phil La Follette, former Governor of Wisconsin, has just been promoted to full colonel. He'll be going home soon on leave. . . . Lady Emily Coote of Boston's Back Bay and widow of the first Baronet of Ireland, is now in charge of one of the largest Red Cross outfits in Australia, caring for the wants of recently arrived WACS. . . . Everybody knows Corp. Lew Ayres now serving as a chaplain assistant at Hollandia, but few know that Tech. Sgt. Frankie Darro is a dispensing pharmacist at one of New Guinea's big hospitals. He is the former child star who specialized in tough kid roles.

Capt. Lanny Ross has been almost solely responsible for shepherding around the southwest Pacific all of the bigshot entertainers such as Jack Benny, Bob Hope, Carol Landis, Martha Tilton, Jerry Colonna, Larry Adler and Gary Cooper. . . . One of the biggest successes in New Guinea, who, wiseacres thought, would be a flop, was Judith Anderson, who presented Shakespeare to the GIs, and they loved it. . . . Lee Vanatke, INS daredevil flying correspondent with the Far East air force, tells the story of a combat sergeant who, physically unfit for further fighting, was transferred to army post office censorship to assume duties ordinarily assigned to women. The disgruntled, disgusted sergeant reported to his commanding officer, "Sir, I have come to replace a WAC!"

Jack Benny got plenty of belly laughs from General MacArthur's GIs with his crack: "I am an old-timer in these Pacific Islands — I used to spend weekends at Catalina." . . . Lt. Cmdr. George Halas, who used to coach the Chicago Bears professional football team, and is now serving as recreation and welfare officer for the 7th fleet, is accompanying Bob Hope's party on its tour of the southwestern Pacific area and sees that the navy boys get their share of the entertainment.

That Old Chair Can Be Reclaimed With New Seat and Coat of Enamel

By Ruth Wyeth Spears

NEW cane seats are expensive because the work is done by hand. Endless time is required also for scraping off layers of paint to get down to the grain of the wood in doing over many pieces of furniture. The chair shown here did not seem to be worth this labor. It was reclaimed with a seat from a scrap of plywood, blue paint and seat cover of blue and white ticking edged with white material raveled to make narrow fringe.

The chipped white enamel that was on the chair was rubbed with coarse and then with fine sandpaper until smooth. The new seat came next; then flat paint which was allowed to dry 24 hours before applying enamel. Next, the seat cover was made with a

Checks of Steel Canceled With Sub-Machine Gun

A Cleveland company presented the three winners of a contest held in 1932 with their prize money in a form that was symbolic of the firm's welding business — steel checks on which steel letters and figures were welded. Although two feet long, a foot wide and three sixteenths of an inch thick, the checks were honored and then canceled with a sub-machine gun, the word "Paid" being spelled out with bullet holes.

Firestone GROUND GRIP TIRES Give EXTRA TRACTION because THEY CLEAN BETTER!

HAVE you been hearing or reading claims about tractor tire cleaning lately? As a farmer, you are entitled to know the facts. And here they are:

Remember that the Firestone Ground Grip Tread is patented. Its extra-long, triple-braced traction bars do not have "broken center" traction leaks, no trash-catching stubs or buttons. The wide spaces between the bars clean easily, even in soft soil, because there are no corners or pockets for mud to stick or hide. No wonder Firestone Ground Grips clean so much better in ALL soil conditions!

And don't forget that Firestone Ground Grip Tires give you up to 215 extra inches of traction bar length per tractor. That means extra pulling power—and the more pulling power you get, the more time and money you save!

From these facts, it's easy to see why more farm tractors are equipped with Firestone Ground Grip Tires than with any other make. Farmers naturally want the tires that pull better longer—the tires made by Firestone, the pioneer and pacemaker.

Listen to the Voice of Firestone every Monday evening, over N.B.C.

Household Hints

If anyone has a rusty wire clothes line which can not be replaced for the duration, it can be made nearly as good as new by painting with black automobile enamel.

If apples or bananas which are to be used in fruit salads are covered with grapefruit juice and chilled, they will not darken and discolor the salad.

Dip the ends of rag rugs in starch after washing and they will lay flat on the floor instead of curling on the edges.

Save the core wax paper comes on to wrap your doilies on to prevent wrinkling after laundering.

A few drops of vinegar or lemon juice added to the water used in poaching eggs will help hold them together.

A rag moistened in milk helps to whiten the piano keys.

A "costume box" is suggested where there are children to amuse. Into a certain box put discarded articles of clothing which have "costume" possibilities. Children love to "dress up," and if the box is reserved for certain occasions such as Halloween, vacations, etc., it is enjoyed more than if it is available all the time.

Don't do without a grater just because such articles are scarce in the stores—make one! Take the lid from a mayonnaise or peanut butter jar, and drive nail holes from the inside out. Put them fairly close together, and the rough surface on the outside does the grating.

Tinley Servicemens' Letters

The following letter was received by Mr. and Mrs. Fred Nitsche from their son Richard, RM 3-C.

France and England
August 31, 1944

Dear Mom and Dad:

I'll try to write you a few lines although the ship is really rolling. I was in France yesterday! According to the news reports it can't last much longer. I hope and pray that we'll all get to come home before we go to the Pacific.

Remember in one letter you wrote about the Ducks? And about the people riding in them if they bought a warb ond? Well, the Ducks in France are sure playing an important part in the war although no one ever hears about them. They are on the run 24 hrs. a day. It's fun to watch them drive down to the water and keep right on going in. They are used to unload the large freighters also the LCT's are used for that purpose.

The prisoners are asked if they want to work. If they do they are paid 80c a day and 3 hot meals. That is a mighty d... nice way to treat the prisoners. Just think when the war is over and they are sent home they'll have money in their pocket. In fact they are better off than we are. I have seen the prisoners by the thousands. All nationality, including Japs. They range from 12 years old to over 55. The kids are the worst ones. They don't know any better as that is all they ever were taught—how to keep on killing.

I have seen them loading wounded on a ship. American and Germans together. I'll never forget that sight as long as I live. I saw one German soldier who had his whole face bandaged up and just his nostrils were sticking through. I seen our boys with legs and arms off or in casts. I tell you it isn't a very pleasant sight. If only the people in the U.S. who are so d... ignorant of things could see this sight. The people who have sons in the war don't need anything like that to remind them. If the people in TOWN who complain because they can't get this or that could see this I don't think you'd hear any more from them. (Believe me if I get home and hear any talking like that, I'll really open up to them. If you ever hear anyone say anything like that show them this letter then watch their expressions change.

Or even if they could see how the British people are living here it would startle them.

Everything is rationed here and I mean everything. About the only thing that isn't rationed is a daily newspaper, providing you can get one before they sell out.

Now there are a few things that aren't, like some fresh fruit. But the prices are so high that no one can afford them. even us "rich" yanks. That reminds me of a story:

A soldier walked into a fruit store and bought 3 peaches, the store keeper said they were 2 schillings apiece, 40c. The soldier gave the keeper a 10 schilling note and said keep the change. The store keeper inquired why? The soldier said "I stepped on a grape coming in". That's the way prices are here. They raise the price of an article when they see a Yank coming. If an Englishman buys some thing he gets it much cheaper than us. Very, very few people are friendly towards us Yanks. I try to be as friendly as possible but very few people will talk to you. The trouble with them is they are jealous and suspicious of us. They envy us. We have everything and they have to get their wants from the U. S. But I guess I have bored you long enough haven't I?

How are you all anyway? Have you been getting any more rain lately? I hope you get it in time to help home crops. Are they still paying 42A? What's new in Tinley? I guess that's all for now. God bless you. Your loving son,
Rich.

Citizens Service Comm.

Dear friends of Tinley Park:

I haven't got around to writing you in a long time. But I still think of you folks and really appreciate what you are doing for the Service men. I have moved again, this time they sent me a long way from home. I am somewhere in England. I want to thank you for the cigarettes you sent me. I received them just before I left the States and you know cigarettes always come in handy to a soldier.

Well that's all I've got to say this time, there isn't an awful lot you can write about over here. Thanks again for the cigarettes.

As ever your friend,
John Andres

Hello Folks:

Just a few lines to let you know I received your cigarettes and to give you a new address.

I am on a good ship with a good crew. We get good food here also. I met my brother Bob here in Portland. He's on a liberty ship. It's too bad he couldn't stay here longer than he did. I'll close now and write later.

As ever, like more than a few hundred years. All kidding aside, I have been very lucky and have no complaints to make.

I want to thank you for the paper which I have received regularly, I really enjoy reading it and about the fellows and the things they have done and are doing.
